

Quench

While water is traded as commodities to quench our burning thirst, women from underprivileged places are traded also as commodities to quench the burning sexual desires of affluent countries. Like water, they are tapped out, without a say, and have no control over their destinies as they were forcefully displaced.

Materials: Bottled spring water from a international commercial bottler. Altered images of a woman of `colour` who was tied up, blindfolded, naked and gagged are stuffed inside these bottles.
